Two noteworthy events of the day—the both nests of wren have fledged; the young wren are torporizing around the yard, to the very noisy accompaniment of their parents. I am pleased, very pleased, that both broods have been successfully fledged. Hopefully many or all of the young will nest in this area next year, and ②

the first of my OWP lilies for naturalizing blossomed ce matin — a very deep and intense red with light spotting at the center of the blossom, which is upward facing, which leads me to believe that it is a Lilium "Firecracker" — #42039 (p. 44 in the White Flower Farm, Fall 1985 Catalogue). I noticed when I drove out of the yard at the Golf Course at 1 P.M. today that OWP also has a couple lilies out in her bed near Brown's box. OWP's blossoms were yellow. Apparently my egg-in-water protective screen has deterred, at least for the moment, the deer who, about a week ago, ate four of my lily buds and several sunflower plants. If the deer <sup>continue</sup> to stay away, my lily bed should be breath-taking in about 10 days.

Given the complexity of yesterday as well as the amount of tiring that I did here, I had the distinct, and very clear, impression ce matin, at 9 A.M. and lay in bed, that today was Monday, yesterday having been Saturday + Sunday. Suddenly it occurred to me that today is Sunday and so I sprang out of bed and went down and bathed and prepared for Church. Today is, or appears to be, among the warmest days of the summer thus far — as I stood in the Tinker Creek the water even seemed warm as it swirled around my legs. Naturally I made the tour of my garden, <sup>when I came up from below</sup> and discovered that the gourds in the Sundaff lawn are sending
